

Sustainable Jurisdictional Approach

Promoting district-level progress towards sustainable palm oil production in Indonesia

MOVING TOWARDS LEGAL AND DEFORESTATION-FREE PALM OIL

WHAT & WHY

Policy dialogue

Support for timely, constructive policy dialogue between EU and Indonesia on palm oil sustainability.

Information exchange

By supporting multi-stakeholder processes to inform district sustainability monitoring, policy makers, district governments and civil society can enhance efforts to promote sustainability, and market actors can access objective information to meet their due diligence requirements.

JURISDICTIONAL APPROACH

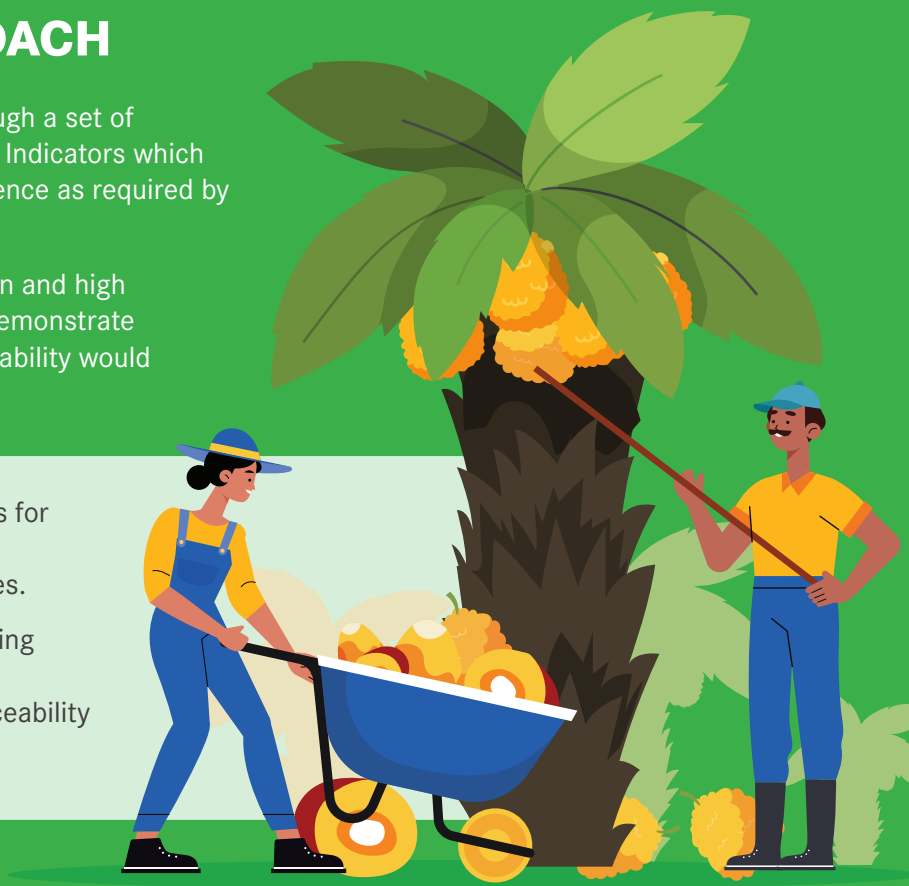

District sustainability is tracked through a set of customised Sustainable Jurisdictions Indicators which can provide information for due diligence as required by global markets.

Districts with low risk of deforestation and high levels of sustainability could better demonstrate progress, while transitions to sustainability would be incentivised in other districts.

- Smallholders' inclusion in supply chains for sustainable palm oil is essential to improve livelihoods and meet sustainability objectives.
- Smallholders need support in overcoming technical, financial and knowledge-related challenges. Issues with land tenure and traceability also need to be addressed.

BENEFITS

Smallholders

Income through access to supply chains for sustainable palm oil and better targeted support.

Environment

Policies and markets work together in eliminating deforestation from commodity supply chains and enhancing sustainable economic development.

Trade

Operators and traders can access information on sustainability performance to inform their due diligence processes and enhance trade in sustainable palm oil.

Disclaimer. This flyer has been produced with the financial assistance of the European Union. The views expressed herein can in no way be taken to reflect the official opinion of the European Union.

© European Forest Institute, 2023

KAMI

Funded by the European Union